Leading a Group, Building Trust

OV Community Recreation Center | Group Lead | June 2022 – August 2025

The responsibility

As a summer camp group lead, I helped supervise groups of approximately 15–25 campers between ages 6 and 14. I was responsible for keeping activities organized, helping campers feel included, and maintaining a safe, positive environment.

My contribution

I planned and coordinated games and daily activities, helped manage schedules, supported junior counselors, and communicated with parents and camp leadership. I had to adjust my approach for different ages and personalities while keeping the group moving together.

The leadership challenge

A group of campers does not always move at the same pace or respond to the same instructions. My role required balancing patience and approachability with clear directions, consistent expectations, and the confidence to make decisions.

What I learned

Leadership is not just telling people what to do. It is making people feel heard while taking responsibility for the group. I became more comfortable adapting my communication style, staying organized, and helping others work together.

How it connects to my career

In business management or real estate, I will need to coordinate people with different needs, communicate expectations, and follow through. Camp leadership gave me early practice doing those things when others depended on me.

Retrospective reflection based on my work responsibilities and experience; not a contemporaneous incident report or an original camp/safety record.
